

SENATORIAL COLTS.

The Younger Solons Have Been Asserting Themselves in Great Shape.

The colts of the Senate have had a nice trot around the field and find themselves back in the corral. There are some things like a dozen of them, nearly all young orators from the West, who are convinced that they came down to Washington commissioned to take the leadership of the upper legislative branch of Congress. Every little while, whenever a measure of some party significance was brought up, the colts have been capering around and making things as troublesome as they could, only to be rebuffed in finally by strong hands.

One of the spirited young colts is Senator Borah, Idaho, eloquent and undoubtedly capable. He took it upon himself to "do" Senator Foraker of Ohio, who was championing the cause of the negro soldiers discharged because of alleged complicity in the Brownsville affair. There are only 300 or 400 negro soldiers in the army, according to Mr. Borah, but he could take that stand without endangering the political career of himself or Senator Foraker, but none the less did not paralyze or pulverize the older Senator. This is taking hold of other hands, is going about his duties as usual, smiling significantly when Borah is mentioned, and saying quietly that if Borah is going to take hold of other hands at the same time, he thinks he can economize effort in that way.

Then the President pitched in for four big battleships, the old Senate leaders were of the same opinion that the House has expressed. The construction of two ships would be a plenty. It was all the country could afford. The leaders scooted the Senate in a debate, including Senator Lodge, the President's closest personal friend in public life. But the colts saw new opposition, with the quality of a new and a caper. The President sent for most of them and, of course, they were not willing, but glad to go for four big battleships. The President would give the old Senate leaders a dickens of a time. The President had asked several of the older Senators to take hold of the cause, but they declined and reluctantly he had to ask Senator Beveridge. That pleased Mr. Beveridge greatly, but he is sincerely convinced he ought to be the leader of the Senate. He has served so long and with the quality of a man that he supposes he will have to wait till the older men get out of the way.

And so the consideration of the four battleship amendment furnished the colts another chance to caper around the Senate and they kept it up in a debate which lasted for four or five days longer than there was any real warrant for doing.

The strife of the ambitious young Senators has been going on in the fashion for several months and it will be kept up, perhaps, to the end of the session. Certain Republican leaders in the House of Representatives and regard themselves, with some warrant, as veterans in the legislative service. They have reached the point where they think the Senate leaders have not advanced them as rapidly as should be or are disgruntled because others of the House have been given a place on the great Appropriations Committee. Several Senators of that committee are growing old and weary of the immense amount of hard work which they have to do, and they are looking for a younger man to take some of the burden. But he had to be a competent and well trained man, or he would have been a cumbersome rather than a help. Mr. Henryman had been chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, and had been successful in his position work and accordingly there seemed to be warrant for placing him in that responsible position. But Mr. Henryman, of Nebraska, who was also a member of the House Appropriations Committee, would have liked the same job, but did not want it. He was the most spirited of the Senate colts and is kicking out in fine style.

Senator Beveridge wanted to be a member of the Finance Committee, and is kicking out in fine style. Senator Beveridge wanted to be a member of the Finance Committee, and is kicking out in fine style. Senator Beveridge wanted to be a member of the Finance Committee, and is kicking out in fine style.

The list of the recalcitrant colts might be added to. The Senate in the last three years has gained a lot of new blood, the old guard has been gradually dropping out and those who are left sometimes have to look to their laurels. And yet the Senate has a little chance that the colts will get loose and carry things their own way. The Senate leaders are very anxious to bring up their program. They know that leaders lead by following the wishes of the majority. They are very anxious to bring up their program. They know that leaders lead by following the wishes of the majority.

Then as soon as a new Senator comes in who demands respect for his dignity and capacity for legislation they begin to provide for him. They make good places for him on committees, places where he can get quiet and shall be developed by a quiet but effective method. Few, if any, mistakes are made by such selections.

The Senators who do the kicking, the young colts, can safely be classed either as having inferior ability or as men who have not yet had enough opportunity to show their quality of their ability. Occasionally a young colt, who demonstrates great power by kicking, convinces the leaders that he can be of real use in conducting the business of the Senate, whereupon he is certain to be given recognition. And at that point he ceases to be a colt and becomes a kicker. He then discovers that the Senate is a great legislative body under the leadership of exceedingly wise and able men.

The 73d Ohio was 73d Pa. Editor National Tribune: As to Dr. Hiram's action of "killing" Colonel Moore's correction, Hamilton, who, by the way, is dead, not living in Bangor, as you say, got the 73d Pa. and the 73d Ohio mixed up. Both were in the Eleventh corps, Steiwer's Second Division, but in different brigades. The 73d Pa. killed old regiment, belonged to Bushbeck's Brigade, led by Colonel Bricker, fell with Kottler at Bull Run, and Moore commanded it at Chancellorsville. The 73d Ohio, Col. Orland Smith was in Barlow's Brigade. The first was in the fight, the 73d Ohio was not but with Barlow at the Furnace. The 73d Pa. was largely German; the 73d Ohio was partly—Louis to Weiss, Pa., O.

9th N. Y., 23d and 27th Mass.

Editor National Tribune: Please give a short history of the 9th N. Y., 23d and 27th Mass. Heckman's Brigade, Arthur S. Bostwick, Rochester, N. Y.

The 9th N. Y. was organized at Trenton from September to October, 1861, and finally mustered out July 12, 1862. It was first commanded by Col. Charles Heckman, who was promoted to Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Nov. 29, 1862, succeeded by Col. Joseph W. Allen, who was drowned at Hatteras Inlet, Jan. 15, 1862. Col. Abram Zabriske then took command, who died in Chesapeake Hospital, Jan. 1864, followed by Col. James Stewart, Jr. Brevet Brigadier-General, who was in command at final muster-out. It belonged to Weitzel's Division, Eighteenth Corps, and lost 46 killed and 166 from disease, etc.

The 23d Mass. was organized at Annapolis, Md., Sept. 28, 1861, and mustered out finally at New York on June 25, 1865. It was commanded by Col. John Kurtz, who resigned, and succeeded by Col. George Elwell, who also resigned Sept. 20, 1864. The command then fell upon Lieut.-Col. John W. Raymond, who remained in command until he was killed at the battle of Fort Fisher, Dec. 1864. It belonged to Weitzel's Division, Eighteenth Corps, and lost 84 killed and 134 from disease, etc.

The 27th Mass. was organized at Springfield, from September to November, 1861, and finally mustered out on June 25, 1865. It was commanded by Col. Horace C. Lee, Brevet Brigadier-General, who left the regiment upon the expiration of his term of service, and was succeeded by Col. Walter G. Bartholomew, in command at final muster-out. The first two years of the history of the regiment were spent in North Carolina, where it engaged in numerous battles and skirmishes. In April, 1864, it joined the army of the Union and fought at Richmond. At Drewry's Bluff, while fighting in a dense fog, the regiment was surrounded, and besides the killed and wounded, 253 were taken prisoners, among whom were the Colonel, Lieutenant-Colonel, and Gen. Heckman, Cold Harbor it fell heavily. It belonged to Weitzel's Division, Eighteenth Corps, and lost 127 killed and 264 from disease, etc.—Editor National Tribune.

The Released Prisoners.
Editor National Tribune: I have often wondered when and how the poor "starving" soldiers were released. I write this to ask if you will not tell me something about it—C. L. Spelman, Philadelphia, Pa.

Deliverance came to the prisoners in many different ways. Those in Richmond and the neighborhood were sent to City Point, where they were delivered to the flag of truce advanced by the Union. Those in Charleston, S. C., and Wilmington, N. C. A large number of those who remained in Andersonville were sent across the river to Vicksburg, where they were delivered into our lines and sent North by steamboats on the Mississippi River. One boatload of these were on the Sullivan, and the other on the S. C. and the explosion of one of the boilers of the boat. The remainder of those at Andersonville were sent down the railroad as far as possible, and then marched across the country to our lines at Jacksonville. They had all of them been so debilitated by previous hardships that they were unable to march. He was free until he was actually inside of our lines and under the protection of Old Glory.—Editor National Tribune.

50th Pa.
Editor National Tribune: Please hunt up the 50th Pa., and give me some history of it.—Joseph Reitzel, Columbia, Pa.

The 50th Pa., one of Fox's "Fighting Regiments," was organized at Harrisburg, Pa., as a volunteer regiment, and mustered out July 30, 1865. It was commanded by Col. C. C. Christ, Brevet Brigadier-General, who was mustered out on expiration of his term of service, and succeeded by Col. Wm. H. Telford, in command at the time of final muster-out. In July, 1862, the 50th joined the Ninth Corps, then at Fortress Monroe, and was actively engaged in the battles of Manassas and Chantilly. After Antietam it was transferred to the West, where it participated in the Siege of Vicksburg. After the campaign at Knoxville, Tenn., it returned to Virginia, where it fought under Grant from the Rapidan to Appomattox. It belonged to Ellix's Division, Ninth Corps, and lost 100 killed and 134 from disease, etc.—Editor National Tribune.

Trouble With the Colonels.
Editor National Tribune: Please tell me thru your paper why or how it was that the Colonels were discharged or dismissed from the service? Was there some action of theirs?—C. A. Busk, 9th Ill. Ong, Neb.

The position of Colonel of a regiment was not an exceedingly difficult one to fill and requiring a man of peculiar and decided abilities. Many honest, able, patriotic men raised regiments which were well equipped and drilled for various reasons, and they soon retired, as their usefulness was developed by the hard, sharp service required of them. They were usually promoted to brigades for various reasons, and they soon retired, as their usefulness was developed by the hard, sharp service required of them.

ready certain of their seats. But some contest against the Foraker delegates are so palpably without foundation that even a pro-Taft National Committee can lastly reject the arguments of the Forakerites. The delegates who are favorites will make for the seats. Some people think the senior Ohio Senator will have fully 50 votes in the convention.

The Vice-Presidential Nominee.

There is much speculation in official Washington about the Republican nominee for the Vice-Presidency. As long as it is taken for granted that Secretary Taft will head the ticket, saying only by those who for one reason or another are yelling for a third term for Roosevelt, the question of the Vice-Presidential nomination is a matter of the time being over the running mate.

WORLD'S NEW FRONT.

John Phoenix used to say that he never could sufficiently admire Astor's enterprise in locating Astoria, nor his good sense in leaving it.

The city has an area of about 40 square miles, with fine paved streets and 20,000 inhabitants. There are many fine buildings, libraries, school houses, Chamber of Commerce, hotels and charitable institutions. Its harbor is one of the finest in the world and is readily accessible to the largest ships. Behind it lies the great valleys of the Columbia and Willamette, which furnish freight for several thousand and coastwise steamship lines and it is the terminus for four great railroad systems, the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, the Great Pacific and the Southern Pacific. Its foreign commerce amounts to more than $10,000,000 a month, principally in grain, lumber and manufactures.

Developing, since the Willamette Falls, 12 miles from the city, furnish an abundant source of power. The city is in the course of construction. Portland has had a rapid growth, not equal to that of Seattle. In 1850 the city had 1,000 inhabitants. In 1860 it had risen to 17,577, and the census of 1900 gave 90,426. Portland is opposite the great mouth of the Columbia, the great river of the Northwest, where the headwaters of the Missouri come close to those of the Columbia.

San Francisco.

From our first acquisition of California, San Francisco has been generally regarded as our principal gateway to the Pacific. The city has opened into a perfectly secure and landlocked harbor in San Francisco Bay and makes a haven unsurpassed in the world. The city has a long history, and has been written of late about San Francisco as to make a description of the city superfluous. The main danger has been that the people of San Francisco were so sure of their preeminence as to not take the necessary steps to protect themselves against the possibility of being taken away by more active rivals. This cause has resulted in the decay of many promising metropolises. Secretary Taft, who heard the ticket, saying only by those who for one reason or another are yelling for a third term for Roosevelt, the question of the Vice-Presidential nomination is a matter of the time being over the running mate.

by Commodore Stockton, U. S. N., in 1846, and in 1850 had a population of 102,479 population, of whom 20,000 were of foreign birth. At one time Los Angeles had a very inflated boom which burst, but since that time the town has gone on steadily, healthfully and strongly, increasing in wealth, population and importance.

Santa Barbara, which has just given our fleet such a magnificent reception, is known as the Newport of the Pacific, and has aspirations for commercial greatness. It is 100 miles west by north from Los Angeles and is picturesquely situated on a slope rising gradually from the shore to the old Franciscan mission, 340 feet above the bay. It has a fairly good harbor and is on the coast branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad. The country around produces great quantities of beans, walnuts, lemons and oranges. The city had a population in 1900 of 6,587.

San Diego, which Jefferson Davis and the pro-slavery cabal tried so hard to make a great city, is the County seat of San Diego County, 25 miles south of Los Angeles. San Diego Bay forms a splendid landlocked harbor 22 square miles in area. The bay is one of the finest in the world, and is a separate, large tract of land on the bay for a cavalry station and for fortifications. The latter are known as Fort Rosecrans, Fort Mifflin, and the reputation as a health resort and the shores of the bay are dotted with pleasant settlements and villas, among which Coronado Beach, with its splendid Hotel del Coronado is the principal. There are ostrich farms and other peculiar attractions in the neighborhood.
